Assma Basalamah: “I do not believe in secret ballots”

Original title: Virtual Ballots

Original address: <http://assmabasalamah.wordpress.com/>

Excerpt:

I do not believe in secret ballots. What I mean by that is that one should be confident and firm about the positions they take. Because when you affirm where you stand, you are subject to being challenged on it, and will therefore probably put a lot more reflection and pondering into assuming a stance.

Assma Basalamah was the Communications officer for the Muslim Students Association (MSA) at the University of Ottawa in 2011-2012. MSA was the first Muslim Brotherhood organization established in North America in 1963.

I do not believe in secret ballots. What I mean by that is that one should be confident and firm about the positions they take. Because when you affirm where you stand, you are subject to being challenged on it, and will therefore probably put a lot more reflection and pondering into assuming a stance. So I decided to take on what I call a magnifier. While written expression and poetry are the reflections of our modest voices, the Internet is the prism that could be put into effect to diffuse the more or less vibrant-slash-popular shades of our positions. So here I am, using our age's newest edition of democracy.. or as I like to call it: Democracy 2.0 -in short- the Web. Where i believe every blog, every video post, forum post (ok fine: facebook posts count too), etc. to BE A VOTE. Because everyone is entitled to a space to leave a piece of their mind be it within the political spectrum that we are confined to or not. Be it or not part of the two or three choices laid out by our two-party systems that would be more worthy of the name of a quasi-democracy (or in some parts of the world -where they have it worst: mono-partisan dominance democra..or said bluntly: hypocrisy!) This is my vote, what's yours? (your ballot is the comment box below) .^^
